PES5 on the Xbox 360 has no music at all..Q: What if I need to sell more than 1 license? I have to redistribute a license to my customers. The license is per server, so if I have 10 servers I need 10 licenses. But I'm afraid if I provide a single license to each customer, they will give the product back to me. What are the consequences? I don't want to lose the customer! A: I'm not sure if that's a legitimate concern but here are a few possible things to consider: Embed the license, or the key, on a sticker, or a small piece of paper. This way, the potential customer won't know how many licenses there are until they've purchased them. Also, because they won't see any special license number, they won't be aware of the fact that they're giving you the product back, so that may have a benefit. When you provide the license (or key), don't accept it. You could offer to sell them more, or make it a point to sell them out, as soon as they leave. Not sure if this is what you're asking, but you could try to exploit that kind of an arrangement. A more 'extreme' option: Offer a guarantee. You promise that they won't have to return it if they use it. This usually works better in the software industry. Also, it's harder to return something like a printed image. Of course, you must either print a barcode on your product, or pay a lot more for a re-scannable barcode. Also, in the case of a printed image (e.g., you use a printed picture of a young girl with a unicorn, and it's all over your product), it's harder to make sure they use it properly, or let the product age, or be exposed to light, and that might help you a little bit. A: One thing that might be worth considering, given that you need to transfer licenses in any event, is to use a transfer code approach. Typically, this involves creating a key to encrypt the license
