My issue is when run the test on every input data step, the processes takes some time, but the dataset used in machine learning is very huge. I have tried to add an `if(len(list(le)) == 0)`, but i need to update the dataset for each iteration. I also tried to add a `sleep(10)` but still the same issue. Could someone please help me or suggest any better way of dealing with this? A: If your data is huge, then try to do few things: Use different cores to do the processing. If you are working on unix/linux then: Try to launch the processes on different cores. For example, if you have 4 cores, then launch the processes on each core. Instead of making the processes wait for the input when it is available, you can read the file every 100-1000 lines and then process all that data. Q: What is the difference between "your" and "you're"? What is the difference between you and you're? Is there a difference between "you your" and "your your"? For example: they've came here today for you she's in the living room for you A: To use the contraction 'your is normal if you are talking about you personally. But it is also quite common for people to use it when they are talking about you who they are addressing with the sentence. you → your your → you're So: They've came here today for you → They've came here today for you → they've came here today for you. She's in the living room for you → She's in the living room for you → she's in the living room for you. The noun for 'you' is always in singular.
